We hope you're excited about what's next for your budget! As we've been working on our 1.0 version, we've been gathering ideas from you, our users, on what would make it the best possible budget. We've decided to create a new budget version that includes many new features and will be more customizable. That means you can set up your budget to work exactly how you'd like. As we've developed the new version, we've also been adding new features, fixing bugs, and offering new ways to customize your budget so that it's just the way you want it. So, we wanted to take the opportunity to invite you to take a look at our preview version to see all the cool things you can do with our brand new budget! From the images below, you can see the new budget version being used to show you the kind of customization you can now do. And you can see some of the new ways you can display your budget and the kind of control you can now have over it. Here are some screenshots of the preview version of the new family budget: You can see that you have a total of two budget categories. One is called "Spending" and the other is called "Savings." You can divide the money up as you see fit in these categories. You can also set the dates that these categories are based on. You can also see that the categories that you set are displayed differently than in the previous version. You can also see how you can set up different budgets to compare how much you're saving or spending over time. In the new version, you can also view the data over a longer period of time. You can see that you can compare the data for each month. In the new version, you can also add events. An event is like a type of category in that it can be used to track your savings or
