The Legend of Heroes: Trails of Cold Steel II Update v1 1-CODEX.Posted on Monday, March 10, 2010 Saltwater Tides The high and low tides of the past three weeks were especially high and this time around, I didn't wait around to see what the June high tide would bring. It was a really nice Easter weekend and I got out on the boat at noon and cruised a mile out into the Gulf of Mexico. I am not a strong swimmer and I usually am uncomfortable in the water, but I managed to just about float for the whole way out. It was really nice to have the full boat and I did come back, I missed the boat and had to use the oars to pull it back to the dock. A few years back, I had learned something new about tides and I had been out on the boat a bit to get to know it. We know that there are two major tides; a spring tide and a neap tide. The spring tide is the spring and the neap is the fall. The new moon, when it is directly behind the sun, is a new spring tide or a full moon tide. The full moon tides are the best because they are the biggest tides and I am pretty sure I should know better than to be so gung ho about them on a boat in two fathoms of water! It is always a long and slow process to get to the right time to catch the high or low of the tides. I usually try to catch it at spring tide, but this time I chose to do it early in the afternoon. To me, it meant I could really spend the time out in the Gulf of Mexico without having to worry about weather or inclement conditions. It also meant that I could enjoy a nice Easter weekend and my family could enjoy it with me. I like to go out at night because it makes the water a little bit darker and it makes it feel more peaceful, but the neap tide is also nice. It was 3e33713323
