The aim of this article is to review the literature on IgG4-related disease (IgG4-RD). IgG4-RD is characterized by the presence of a high level of serum IgG4. The disease is characterized by the involvement of multiple and predominantly retroperitoneal lesions. The leading clinical feature is a constant hypergammaglobulinemia. Most patients have an elevated serum IgG4 level. The association with other IgG4-related diseases, such as Mikulicz's disease and autoimmune pancreatitis, suggest a common pathogenic mechanism for those syndromes. Pathologically, the lesions are characterized by a lymphoplasmacytic infiltrate containing elevated numbers of IgG4-positive cells that are often associated with storiform fibrosis and obliterative phlebitis. Immunohistochemistry reveals IgG4-positive plasma cell infiltration in the affected organs. The diagnosis of IgG4-RD should be considered in cases of idiopathic retroperitoneal fibrosis with a high serum level of IgG4. It must be distinguished from other retroperitoneal inflammatory conditions. The classification of IgG4-related disease is still evolving. Most recently, an international group has proposed a new classification of IgG4-RD based on new and updated
