Description The bronze, 16 ft. tall Abraham Lincoln statue (1895–1897) was created in 1895 by sculptor Robert W. Gibson, depicting the 13th President of the United States at his most memorable pose, standing at the top of a granite base that reads "Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States". The statue is currently located at the federal government's Department of Agriculture (USDA), and the height of the statue is very close to the height of the Washington Monument. The base was donated by the State of Illinois in 1895, as part of a series of plaques commemorating the state's statehood. The United States Department of Agriculture acquired the base in 1925. The statue was removed from the USDA grounds in 1950 and placed in a tombstone-shaped pedestal in front of the United States Treasury Building until 1960, when it was installed in the Lincoln Memorial; then finally

What's New In Ksitigarbha Screensaver?

Hell is not somewhere in the future, neither is heaven. Each act carries its own heaven or hell. Remain balanced and you are in heaven; become unbalanced and a hell is created - nobody else is creating it for you. Ksitigarbha is a Buddha of Mercy. He has a following of over one billion people in China alone. He is one of the most celebrated religious figures in the world. His sutras describe the suffering of beings who are unable to attain liberation. A rare photo of Ksitigarbha Buddha as a child, along with the 10 vows and 10 precepts of the faith, which are the guidelines for daily life. On each Ksitigarbha screen saver one of the Ksitigarbha vows can be read out. One of the vows reads: "Man shall not kill nor shall he willingly cause the killing of any living being." A quote from Ksitigarbha's Medicine Buddha - "When I was born, I was born in hell; when I have been born in hell, I shall go to heaven; when I have been born in heaven, I shall have a further rebirth in the plane of existence where all activities lead to further suffering." The sangha (monks and nuns) of the faith perform 10,000 prostrations a day in order to appease Ksitigarbha and bring ease and peace to those in hell. This particular Buddha was just a child when he reached enlightenment. In the 12th century, when Buddhism was waning in China, the faith was revived by the new emperor, who called himself Ch'ien Lung, and by the Chan (Zen) school. It is said that Ksitigarbha is the reincarnation of the Buddha Shakyamuni. In our time the Chinese Buddhists offer incense to Ksitigarbha, with the hope of his intercession to achieve their spiritual aspirations and worldly aims. A short history: - In the Chinese tradition, Buddhism is known as Zen (pronounced "Ch'an") and is a variation of the Tibetan Buddhist tradition. The tradition began in India and was brought to China via the Silk Road from India by the 7th century. The tradition began with the Bodhisattva and is associated with enlightenment, especially the enlightenment of all beings, and the path to enlightenment, the bodhisattva path. A statement from the Ksitigarbha tradition - "Practice the way of enlightenment, strive for enlightenment and you will be enlightened." This belief became the basis of Zen. The term "Chan" comes from the Chinese character "Zhen", meaning "buddha way." This was adopted in Japan, where it was pronounced Ch'an, as used by the Soto school
