The circuits of conventional electronic cameras having autofocus device function usually employ a locking circuit for locking the camera focus at the position set by the distance meter. This locking circuit operates such that in case the focusing is being adjusted, a trigger signal is outputted from the camera or the camera power supply, and the lock circuit is released. The purpose of this is to inform the distance meter that the adjusting operation of the distance meter is being performed and the distance value is to be held until the shutter release operation. On the other hand, the camera body is controlled to be 4bc0debe42
