through Oklahoma County In a span of several hours on Thursday, attorneys for Bob Kelly and the Oklahoma City City Board of Education went through an appellate record the size of a small trunk. It was the day Kelly's lawsuit challenging Oklahoma's policy of school busing died. The contention that the policy violates the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment and the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Oklahoma Constitution was rejected without oral argument by the three-judge panel appointed to hear the case.
"We're deeply disappointed, but we certainly do not take this as an end," said attorney Paul Puryear, who represents the city school board. The record in this case required not only hours of legal research but also the counsel and attention of the Office of the Attorney General. "You have to print up, pack up and FedEx the whole court file to the state Supreme Court," Puryear said. "That's what they said in their order." The appellate court justices, according to Puryear, took steps to keep the case from being mooted by the students' parents withdrawing their children from public schools. This is essentially what happened. During the three-day trial held in September, Kelly and his attorney were led to believe that a settlement was agreed upon and that the city would abide by the terms. In fact, the settlement has yet to be signed. "The school board has been trying to negotiate a settlement but been unable to do so," Puryear said. "After the trial, we thought that was a good thing. But in fact it's really not. It's the school board's right to be negotiating."
