securities against securities is an appropriate form of action and that there is no bar to the bringing of the suit by the trustee in bankruptcy against the securities held by the bank in its discretion under 11 U.S.C. § 110, sub. a(2) of the Bankruptcy Act[3] even though such securities are impressed with a purchase money mortgage to secure the purchase price. On the contrary, it is specifically provided in this section that "the trustee may obtain such value of such property as may be * * *." The trustee is in the position of the creditor, and by reason of the preference of the Bankruptcy Act[4] to the rights of the creditor, we are of the opinion that he is the proper party to bring suit. *60 The plaintiffs contend that the oral agreement by the Bank to the effect that it would hold the certificates of stock upon the receipt of the purchase price, which represented the actual cash value of the property, when coupled with the knowledge of the bankrupt on or about January 1, 1937, that the debtor had no funds in its account with the bank, was tantamount to notice to the Bankrupt that the debtor was insolvent, rendering the Bank liable to the trustee under the provisions of § 17, sub. a of the Bankruptcy Act. An analysis of the e79caf774b
