In this study we report the genetic characterization of T. cruzi strains isolated from humans and Triatoma infestans in different areas in the Northeast region of Mexico. Twenty five T. cruzi isolates were characterized by genomic DNA PCR using specific primers. The presence of a discrete T. cruzi circulating genotype, named TcIII, was confirmed in the rural area. In the urban area (Mexico City), TcI, TcII, TcV and TcVI genotypes were detected. The distribution of these different genotypes of T. cruzi indicates that human infection is mainly due to rural sources and insect vectors control measures should be used in the urban area to prevent T. cruzi transmission.1.
