Language: English, Vietnamese.This invention relates to an electrochemical cell and particularly to a gel electrolyte cell with high temperature compatibility. Lithium cells are an attractive power source for various uses, particularly in electronic devices such as cell phones and other portable devices. A particularly attractive feature of lithium cells is the relatively high energy density of the lithium cell compared to other types of electrochemical cells. For example, the energy density of a lithium cell is approximately two-times that of a nickel metal hydride cell and three to four times that of a nickel cadmium cell. In most cells, the lithium negative electrode contains lithium ions, while the lithium positive electrode may comprise a material that is capable of the insertion and intercalation of lithium ions such as Sn, Sb, or LiCoO₂. An electrolyte containing a lithium salt in an organic solvent is provided within the cell. One of the principal concerns with lithium cells is the electrolyte. The electrolyte comprises a strong acid and a lithium salt. When the cell is assembled, the electrolyte is typically impregnated in a thin film separator placed between the negative and positive electrode. The separator must allow transport of lithium ions between the two electrodes, but at the same time, it must be a barrier to the electrolyte such that during operation of the cell, the electrolyte does not contact the electrode. In general, the separator may be fabricated from a microporous polyolefin which is laminated between the negative and positive electrode. In one embodiment, the negative electrode comprises a foil of aluminum or an alloy thereof and the positive electrode is fabricated as a thin film of a mixture of Sb and carbon. The negative electrode and positive electrode are formed on opposite e79caf774b
