Lipoxin-A3 regulates multiple innate immune response pathways in the tick-transmitted rodent parasite, Toxoplasma gondii. The trypanocidal properties of 15-deoxy- $\Delta^{12,14}$ -prostaglandin J2 (15d-PGJ2), including its ability to kill Trypanosoma cruzi, the agent of Chagas disease, have been demonstrated. Similarly, the hydroxy-5-desaturase (H-5D) inhibitor, MDL-282, and the N-acyl isoprenoid fatty acid conjugates, protect the parasite against lysol. Together, these findings reveal the existence of novel immune functions of these lipid molecules in the intra- and extracellular stages of the life cycle of T. gondii. The recent demonstration that the antineoplastic p-anisylcaffeate and its active metabolite, p-coumaroylserotonin, have anti-Toxoplasma activity suggests that a series of N-acyl isoprenoid fatty acid conjugates may also possess antileishmanial, antimalarial, and antitrypanosomal activity. Thus, we set out to investigate the in vitro antiparasitic effects of the N-acyl isoprenoid fatty acid conjugates, p-coumaroyl serotonin, p-coumaroylserotonin, and p-anisylcaffeate in T. gondii and Leishmania spp. Here, we show that p-coumaroylserotonin and p-anisylcaffeate, but not p-coumaroylserotonin, inhibit T. gondii growth. These lipid molecules strongly inhibit the generation of reactive oxygen species and the conversion of trypanothione and thiols into their oxidized forms, and prevent the egress of tachyzo
