Goldman’s investment chief Gary Cohn has a long relationship with Mr. Trump, according to people briefed on the matter. He led the economic policy working group in the Trump administration until August. “Gary Cohn could help him with more than money — he’s someone who knows people,” said the person, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because the hiring was not public. The focus of Goldman’s announcement on the adviser was the firm’s ability to help deal with the overhaul of financial regulation President Obama put in place after the financial crisis and that Mr. Trump and his economic advisers in the White House are now focusing on revising. Sandys/The Washington Post via Getty Images) Goldman Sachs has handled jobs in both presidential administrations. The firm’s recruitment of bankers to advise President Bill Clinton included advisers like former Treasury Secretary Robert H. Rubin and White House economists Larry Kudlow and Glenn Hubbard. In a statement, Goldman Sachs said that “Goldman Sachs has an unrivaled record of advising some of the world’s most important public and private companies, including playing a major role in the reform of the financial system after the financial crisis. As the single largest institutional investor in the U.S. we employ more than 4,000 people in this country and serve millions of clients globally.” The Goldman spokesman declined to comment further on the role. Goldman Sachs is working on a massive revamp of Wall Street regulation that could be rolled out over the next year. The firm’s role includes advising banks on how to go about compliance and why they should comply. The rules are meant to raise banks’ capital levels

Features Key:

Collaborative Empire building
Unlimited territory, army and objects
Auction of territory and items and other game events.
Multiple inbuilt maps to choose from and optionally customise
Coded in Python, supports Linux and Mac OSX
Open source

How it works

Raptor Territory is played on a series of map tiles on a grid, and you get to take over some of the tiles. Only a set of tiles is visible at any time, and as you take over the tiles you gain more territory in an escalating manner. Each game has a set of pre-defined starting tiles, with a carrot placed on various parts of the map to attract you to them. The human players draw cards at the start of their turn, each card being a specific action they can take. You can also draw cards, and at the end of the turn you can opt to either take over the tile the carrot was placed on, or to fight for territory. Both players choose who they want to play against, making the game a competitive multiplayer conquest game.

Scoring

Each of the entities a player controls will have an associated score. This score is calculated automatically, and a player who gets too many score points starts to "catch up". Also, players can play auctions to raise money for their score points, so even after the game has started, it still has a competitive edge.

! Help Young People Cope With Stress Researchers set out to find out how adolescents cope with the pressures of school and their social lives. Andrew Blieszner Researchers set out to find out how adolescents cope with the pressures of school and their social lives. One of the hardest things about being a teenager is dealing with the social and academic demands of high school. It's much easier to confide in a parent or older sibling or adult friend. But not everyone has friends or family near or far, so the best solution is to learn to deal with that stress on your own. A new study published in the journal Pediatrics and co-authored by University of Arizona researchers explored how teens with chronic health conditions such as diabetes or asthma deal with the stress of dealing with the demands of school and the social demands of being a teen. Because teens with chronic health conditions are much more prone than other teens to develop depressive disorders, and because getting kicked off a team or failing a test can have as much stress as pregnancy, parents, teachers and doctors often keep a close eye on these teens. "With chronic conditions, a lot of adolescents are very hard on themselves and that can translate into behavioral problems and depression," said Kryisia Bontis, a postdoctoral fellow in the UA Department of Psychology and first author on the study. But Bontis, UA doctoral student Daniel Beach, a UA postdoctoral associate and first author on the study, and UA co-author J. Rose Marie Davis, a professor of psychology at Arizona State University College of Medicine, wondered if high school schedules actually make that much of a difference in how teens cope with things like the demands of schoolwork and sports. "If they knew they could be a better football player, they might have wanted to practice more," Beach said. "But it's about not having to deal with those experiences." Their study found teens facing life's problems — such as physical illness, divorce or bereavement — cope best by turning their attention inward and mentally rehearsing the problem in a variety of ways. "Girls may take comfort in getting a tutoring lesson," Bontis said. "They think about how they can memorize their assignments better, so they can perform better." When the same study was done a year later, however, the high school teens who had the Hello This is my first post here. i recently started messing around with nodejs, and in the course of doing so i thought maybe i could get some feedback on a game i am working on. HOST: nodejs.online User Interface: html, canvas, and vector-based sprite assets. It is a 2D tower-defense game. Your goal is to defend your tower from a horde of enemies by drawing tiles on the board. The game is coming along quite well. I am basically seeking any criticism and suggestions you may have to improve the game. Please remember this is my first attempt at building a 2D game on top of nodejs and canvas, and i am not seeking full fledged reviews, but rather comments and ideas that could be incorporated into the game. This could be a learning experience to me and would be extremely helpful. Thanks again for checking out the game. -John W. Frodel ===== Hello everyone!
