G4S accused of “a silent coup” in the HMP Birmingham G4S has lost a bitter war of words over claims it has tried to prevent serving prisoners in its care from taking to Twitter. A campaign group, Birmingham Against Private Security (Baps), claimed it had received reports of intimidation from prisoners, who say they have been told to stop social media activity and fall into line with G4S’s “demands”, in response to a month-long campaign by the group. But an official of G4S said the company’s “commitment to the safety of our clients, staff and the wider public” made it impossible to prevent prisoners using Twitter. But the firm – which paid nearly £2.4 million to cut the population of its custody suites at Birmingham and HMP Frankland, a category-A jail, from around 20 to just six in September – was alleged to have rejected a social media campaign strategy from Baps. The Baps Facebook page was taken offline for five days as a result of the alleged complaints, and the group said it had been forced to abandon social media networking in order to attract attention from the group. The campaigners claimed the firm has used “extraordinary levels of force” and allegedly physically restrained and broken the fingers of prisoners and staff over two days in the spring of 2013, while in charge of Birmingham's jails. But G4S denies all the allegations, saying the group is trying to distract from its own failings. Kevin Hyett, a spokesman for the security services firm, said: "We have no basis to believe that any person currently in detention has been prevented from registering on social media sites, including Twitter. "G4S is a provider of security and detention services. It is neither a prison authority nor a police authority. “However, our commitment to the safety of our clients, staff and the wider public makes it impossible for us to prevent people from using Twitter.” Prison campaigners claim the company has lost control of operations at Birmingham, with staff undermining the overall regime and allegedly striking deals with inmates that can result in them receiving a licence to leave prison. Andrew Neilson, general secretary of the Public and Commercial Services Union (PCS), accused G4S of a “a silent coup”. He said: “
