This program has been created from the ground up to handle large amounts of data and to improve both usability and productivity. The Hydrological Model is based on the Moineau equation, the VARIMAX model or the SINE-WAVE model. The latter is the best performing model among the three in terms of WATERFALL FALL ACUMEN ACCURACY. Features Project Selection: In the project manager the user can create new projects in different land cover types and modify them. Project properties allow the user to select a specific land cover type. An optional box is available for project selection. Importing of netCDF files and standardization of the netCDF files for easy hydrological modeling: Saving hydrological models as netCDF files allows to import the models and to perform water balance calculations in other software packages. The netCDF files are imported to Hydrological Model, where they are standardized for Hydro-Agro Modeller. Modeling of hydro-soil evapotranspiration: Hydro-Soil Evapotranspiration has been implemented in the hydrological model Hydrological Model as a water demand-model for the baseflow component of the Moineau model. Multi-stage modeling and simulation of the water balance and other hydrological processes: NetCDF model hierarchy and Soil and Hydrology tables allow to create multi-stage models of the water balance and various hydrological processes. Modeling of flow direction: One of the major problems of flow accumulation modeling in transient simulation is that the flow directions cannot easily be changed. The flow directions of the model can be defined. Water balance calculation: From Hydrological Model the user can calculate cumulative flow and runoff by "q" or "p" operation. Hydrologic tributaries, which don't represent real tributaries, are automatically calculated by the program. Creation of Hydro-Soil Evapotranspiration Map (ESM) and calculated values in the standard format of the Hydro-Agro Modeller: Creating Hydro-Soil Evapotranspiration Map by using Surface Water Balance requires
