Influence of antibiotic co-treatment on the reproductive toxicity of extended-spectrum β -lactamase producing gram-negative bacteria. β -lactams, mainly penicillins, and cephalosporins, constitute the most important antibacterial therapy. AmpC β -lactamase (AmpC BLA) has been known as the most common resistance mechanism in Enterobacteriaceae. Extended-spectrum β -lactamases (ESBLs) have been a worldwide problem in Enterobacteriaceae. The purpose of this study was to examine the impact of concurrent antibiotics on the reproductive toxicity of ESBL-producing bacteria using a mouse mating model. We determined the effects of various antibiotics on the bacterial survival in human and mouse livers and kidneys. We also examined the ability of antibiotics to affect the growth and reproductive toxicity of ESBL-producing and non-producing bacteria. Parenteral cefpiramide (CPM) significantly reduced the Escherichia coli, Proteus mirabilis and Klebsiella pneumoniae viability in the liver, whereas oral cephaloridine (CEP) and CPM significantly reduced the Enterobacter cloacae viability in the liver, kidney and uterus, although the ESBL-producing E. cloacae were not increased in the urine of the patients treated with CPM, compared with those treated with other antibiotics. Concurrent treatment with CPM and oral CEP significantly reduced the reproductive toxicity of ESBL-producing E. cloacae, compared with that of non-producing E. cloacae. In conclusion, although CPM is not the optimal treatment for patients with UTI, CPM administration is preferable to co-treatment with oral CEP for patients infected with an ESBL-producing bacterium to avoid increased risk of reproductive toxicity. # Copyright 2019 Google LLC # # Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); # you may not use this file except in compliance with the License. # You may obtain a copy of the License at # # # # Unless required by applicable law or agreed to in writing, software # distributed under the License is distributed on an "AS IS" BASIS, # WITHOUT WARRANTIES OR CONDITIONS OF ANY KIND, either express or implied.

Voiced alveolar flap in cleft palate speech: a clinical study. A wide variety of palatal speech sounds can be produced in cleft palate patients. The purpose of this study was to investigate the distribution of phonetic features of the open-close flap and the manner of articulation for velar and alveolar segments in patients with cleft palate. Electropalatography was recorded from nine cleft palate patients, who also served as their own controls. The frequencies of occurrence, medians, and 95th percentiles of the duration of the open-close flap and of the open articulation for velars and alveolars were calculated and analyzed. All the patients produced the open-close flap in cleft palate speech. The durations of the open-close flap produced in the velar and alveolar segments were significantly longer than those produced in the non-cleft controls. Both of the phonetic parameters showed even distribution in the velar and alveolar segments, as well as in the open-close and close segments. The mean percentage of the velar-to-alveolar articulation was 27.67%. The velar and alveolar segments of the palatal flap in cleft palate speech have distinct phonetic features, which can only partially replace the function of close segments. This study suggests that the open-close flap should not be regarded as a unitary concept but should be divided into the open and close segments. Friday, March 11, 2015 Believe it or not, I actually received a letter in the mail yesterday from the Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism. It was part of a survey to "find out how people see the Arkansas River," and it was just about the most bizarre letter I've ever gotten. Among other crazy queries, it asked if I'd be interested in writing a story about how I was "done" with canoeing and fishing: "The Arkansas River is a national treasure. It is a complex part of Arkansas's history and also a vital natural resource. Most of the Arkansas River (Tillamook County east of Portland) is not accessible by road for a driver from the West and is surrounded by private property. Unauthorized fishing is prohibited on the Arkansas River, and it is illegal to take any fish out of the river without permission. As a result of the growth of the city of North Little Rock, many recreational sites on the Arkansas River were "overused" and could not be
