Pfizer Project Rubicon Pfizer Project Rubicon is a large-scale biological containment research project, headed by the United States government's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA). Pfizer's current research focus is on the development of a multi-species biosafety level 3 (BSL-3) facility for the containment of large-scale pathogen research for public health and biodefense purposes. The current focus of the project is on the development of a 9'x8'x6' BSL-3 facility that is capable of containing up to 10,000 mice for the study of disease-causing pathogens. History Pfizer Project Rubicon was awarded a contract of nearly $40 million in mid-2009 by DARPA to develop a BSL-3 laboratory facility. The award was made in conjunction with the Advanced Research Projects Agency-Energy, a division of the United States Department of Energy. In January 2010, the U.S. Army awarded Pfizer a one-year contract worth $7.5 million to conduct a feasibility study on the use of a select group of biological containment alternatives in the development of a BSL-3 facility. Construction of the facility is planned to begin in 2011. Pfizer anticipates that the facility will cost around $140 million to construct. Pfizer will benefit by taking a more in-depth look at the costs and construction time of various containment technologies as part of their evaluation for this project.

It was a huge time sink and a completely new world for me. VOFAM employees worked around the clock to make this game. It can't be done alone, and we have the entire world to thank for the success of our game. Our goals were to make the game as high quality as possible, give it a story and characters, and surpass our worldwide self-imposed deadline. We did this by working tirelessly in a short span of time. But we did it! I'm very proud of the outcome.

It's been quite the journey. The story has already been told through the various FINAL FANTASY games. A world that has already been created, so we tried to create our own world.
