This unique technology brings players closer to the sport, creating more realistic soccer matches, making every action more fluid and natural. Fans will notice that player runs and passes are more dynamic in both attack and defense as a result of the new physics engine, ball control feels more natural in attacking and completing short passes. The pitch movement is more believable as the new ground surface changes speed, according to player speed, depending on the angle of the run. The ball also feels more accurate in higher-speed situations as it follows player movement more naturally. These variables are representative of the ball's momentum and a change in the surface. Additionally, animations are now much more fluid. Players have a better sense of speed and timing, their acceleration is now adjusted as the player changes direction or distance and players have more range of motion with more defensive, goalkeeper and attacking animations. “FIFA, which launched in 2001, has always been a sport in which we aimed to reproduce the true nature of the game,” said Stephan Gerson, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “Through the introduction of ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ we are finally delivering on that goal, making the game feel more believable, more realistic, and more fun to play.” Another technological breakthrough introduced in FIFA 22 is the expanded audio system, bringing a new level of immersion and detail to the soundscape of EA SPORTS FIFA. The FIFA Sound & Music team has spent many hours listening to the most famous stadiums and music in the world, fine-tuning audio sounds based on real-life experiences while capturing the intimate details of the game’s new stadium soundscapes. The audio is also now uniquely calibrated for each stadium and pitch, based on exact measurements. For example, the stadium audio is calibrated to capture and enhance a unique quality in certain stadium areas, like the actual seats and field lines, as well as to improve matchday atmosphere and fan experience. FIFA 22 introduces new features and enhancements to the FIFA Ultimate Team and Skill Games modes. Players will be able to add 20 more players to their squad. New sticker packs, footwear and boot customization packs are available to earn and add to the Manager. Customizable kits have been added to the Builder, allowing players to design and outfit their customized player with creative touches, new footwear and player-specific visual customization. Players can also mix-and-match different types of equipment to customize their ultimate players
