Trafikskola.Defective response of both 5-lipoxygenase and leukotriene C4 synthetase to heat stimulation in a patient with an eosinophilia, neutrophilia and rash. A patient was studied with chronic urticaria and a persistent, severe, basocellular dermatitis. The dermatitis was profuse and the first symptom of it was eczema. This patient had antibodies against IgE, but there was no histological evidence of eosinophils or immediate hypersensitivity cells in the skin. Yet both 5-lipoxygenase and leukotriene C4 synthetase were defective. The leukotriene C4 synthetase was defective during normal heat stimulation as well as during heat stimulation in the presence of indomethacin (a compound that inhibits cyclooxygenase). These observations indicate that 5-lipoxygenase and leukotriene C4 synthetase are both defective in this patient and that cyclooxygenase may be important for the induction of these enzymes.
