The interaction of mono- and polynucleotides with molybdenum sulfate in solution has been investigated by both ultraviolet (UV) absorbance spectroscopy and circular dichroism (CD). Evidence for the formation of a 1:1:1 (M:MO:OH) complex in acidic and neutral conditions has been obtained. Free OH groups in the complex are involved in a reaction with nucleotide molecules leading to structural modification which can be characterized by the alteration in the UV absorbance and CD spectra of nucleotides. The reaction is dependent on pH and only in aqueous solutions at pH 2.0 where the OH groups of both M and OH exist and the reaction is initiated. The interactions between M and nucleotides in aqueous solutions proceed with similar kinetics. The interaction of nucleotides with MO is similar to that of M but the rate of reaction is lower. The role of the OH group of M is also discussed.Q: Adding text to Google Calendar event
